We hope the action taken by the students of the University of New York, whereby they have sworn never to bring discredit upon their city, may prove contagious. If it does it will prove a good thing for many cities and for thousands of people. If the negative form of the vow could only be changed to a positive form in which the students would pledge themselves to bring credit upon the city by faithful discharge of the duties of citizenship, it would be even better. France on the Decline.

Over in France the steady decline in the birth rate is at last causing serious concern. With the population of Germany increasing by leaps and bounds, while that of France remains stationary the outlook is not promising. The French government now proposes to tax bachelors, give bounties for large families and compel all unmarried employees of the state over twenty-five years of age to marry. It is to be hoped that the desired effect may be realized.

It is a singular fact that although France has so low a birth rate the French in Canada are remarkable for their fecundity and large families. Many of these French Canadians with their large families have moved down into New England, where, like France, the birth rate is very low, and at no distant day they will rule that once proud section of our country.

No country can prosper whose birth rate is low, and the experiment to increase the births in France will be watched with interest by all the civilized countries in the world. If it fails, France is doomed, as sooner or later she will be overrun and conquered by some more prolific nation. The French, like the New Englanders, are in many respects a great people, but they cannot survive the destruction of the home any more than New England can.

What We Need.

The census reports are already proving a disappointment as regards the rural population in some of the counties of the middle-west. There is and effects of James M. Tucker, dean actual decrease in population creased size of farms. This necessarily means fewer farms and consequently fewer families, and that in everyway is a misfortune.
